

Nelson Mandela Foundation is promoting the preservation of Madiba's legacy

Text by Caterina Sbrana.

The Nelson Mandela Foundation (NMF), founded in 1999 by Nelson Mandela also known as Madiba, is a non-profit organisation committed to promoting Madiba's living legacy through the collection of all documentation scattered throughout the world. The aim of NMF is to collect this vast resource, facilitate the access to it and promote its preservation and use. To achieve this goal, NMF records where documents are stored and enters into partnerships, to ensure that they are preserved and accessible.

As we approach Nelson Mandela International Day or Mandela Day celebrated on July 18th (Mandela's birthday) we consult part of the archive dedicated to Madiba.

To understand the meaning of the project, just read the presentation. "The Mandela archive is fragmented and scattered all over the world in various places. [...] However, a small amount has been collected since the establishment of the Centre of Memory in 2004, which has been categorised into [...] archive groups and special collections. As these records and collections are organised and processed, the finding aids to them will be made available".

The Nelson Mandela Centre of Memory delivers the core-work of the Nelson Mandela Foundation, and digital materials provided on its platform are for research purposes. The online archive is divided into thematic groups to provide user-friendly access: Records, Awards, Papers, Photographs, Sound and Video, Speeches, Bibliography and Filmography.

The Photographic Collection includes various historical photos.

In the Private and Personal section there are photographs that reproduce the passport of Mandela while in the Tributes section you can find different kind of awards to Madiba.

The Speeches section consists of interviews, speeches, messages, media releases, testimony, lectures, toasts, oaths and declarations made by Nelson Mandela.

Consulting this site, every researcher interested in the life of Nelson Mandela finds an incredible amount of information, even very nice and special ones. I can mention a few: from 2 December 1994 to 12 January 1995 there was in South Africa a Mandela Trophy for cricket; in Kampala, Uganda, there is the Mandela National Stadium; in the section Awards there is a subseries called "Human geography named after Mandela" and many more curiosity can be found.

The screenshot shows a web page from the Nelson Mandela Centre of Memory. The header features the center's logo and name. Below it is a search bar. The main content area displays the title 'Item 1435 - Honorary Citizenship of the City of Sao Bernardo, Brazil.' and a breadcrumb trail: 'Nelson Mandela Tributes > Civic honours and related > Honorary Citizeships > Honorary Citizenship of the City of Sao Ber...'. A large image of a citizenship certificate is shown, with the text 'Câmara Municipal de São Bernardo do Campo' and 'Nelson Mandela' visible. To the right of the image is a sidebar with various utility options like 'Clipboard', 'Add', 'Explore', 'Reports', 'Browse as list', 'Browse digital objects', 'Export', 'Dublin Core 1.1 XML', and 'EAD 2002 XML'. Below these are sections for 'Related people and organizations' (listing 'Câmara Municipal de São Bernardo do Campo (Creator)') and 'Related places'.

The collection, series and archival records contained within the Access to Memory (AtoM) instance, a web-based open source application for "standard-based archival description and access in multilingual, multi-repository environment", is an effort to capture both local and international repositories as well as to describe the collections hold at the Nelson Mandela Centre of Memory.

To this revolutionary but at the same time pacifist man, leader of the anti-apartheid movement that costed him prison in 1956 on charges of treason, the United Nations in November 2009 dedicated, even before his death in 2013, UN Mandela Day celebrated for the first time on 18 July 2010.

It is not difficult to understand how the work of collecting documents by the Nelson Mandela Foundation is of fundamental importance for our present and future generations.
